

In Autumn last year, Jonathan Paul became the first person in the North of England to win Designer magazine's coveted Kitchen Design of the Year.

The judges were particularly impressed with the holistic nature of the design, which involved the total re-configuration of the existing space to create a kitchen that exceeded the client's expectations and led to a stunning finished project.

George Clark, of Channel 4's 'The Home Show', was amongst the judging panel. He described Jonathan's submission as the best design by a long way.

The winning design is absolutely scintillating, containing, as it does, a plethora of innovative and creative features within a bold, modern ergonomic living space. It balances function and form as carefully as its uniquely elevated units and appliances. The use of light, and precisely formed natural and man made materials create an environment which is a fusion of science and modern art.

It is easy to see why the judges and Jonathan's clients are so enamoured by his extensive, dramatic remodelling of the ground floor space.

Jonathan is renowned as a contemporary designer, yet he is also completely at home with commissions for traditional interiors.

Jonathan explains:

'I like to think that living space design

Designer magazine's prestigious Kitchen

is my forte - be it contemporary or traditional. Some people look solely at the various awards I have won, they think of me as a modernist and minimalist. This is correct but it is quite wrong to categorise my work as purely contemporary. Judge for yourself from my portfolio. You will see many different styles. That's why we offer three brands - Rational, Architecture and Bespoke. The choice allows me fantastic scope, with styles ranging from ultra modern to classic farmhouse.

I adore the challenges of seamless, often hidden integration of modern appliances, lighting, TV, Hi-Fi and audio equipment within traditional units. Ergonomic design is just as important within a period space as it is in my latest award winning project. The quality and craftsmanship of our hardwood and hand painted Bespoke range is incredible, any shape, size or detail is possible. I know, I would find it dull and uninspiring to be restricted to a single brand. Not only that, my clients are as diverse as the properties they inhabit, they have very eclectic taste and ideas. So I see my ability to design using the widest palette, the broadest stroke on the largest canvas as key to the continued outstanding success of One Way Kitchens. Who knows, this year I may confound the judges by submitting a traditional kitchen.'

Now there's an innovative idea.

Living space design is my forte, be it contemporary or traditional.
