When a single minded individual with a gift, finds the right showcase for his or her talent the results are spectacular, surpassing all others. We see these rare people in films and on stage, we hear of them in business and politics, we learn about them from their writings and artworks. They are people who seem to be one or more steps ahead of their contemporaries.

Jonathan Paul of One Way Kitchens in Southport, is such a person. Over the years he has won many accolades and awards, his success stems from his talent, drive, and ability to channel his concepts and ideas into designs that enhance living space by seamlessly harmonising function and form.

His clients form an eclectic group from various walks of life. Some might describe themselves as 'self made', others are sports stars and affluent professionals.

Although they all originally had very different requirements ranging from contemporary to traditional, they were as one in their desire for the best possible result. They recognised in Jonathan that they were dealing with someone with a passion. As soon as they saw his ideas they knew they had made the right decision.

Jonathan specialises in remodelling and integrating rooms. Whenever his design dictates he will specify the removal and repositioning of doors, windows, ceilings and walls, helping to instigate and oversee all structural change.

Each concept is meticulously produced with plans calculated to exacting standards, including lighting and sound specification. His installation and fitting teams have been hand picked, for their skills and experience, as has his growing support and coordination team, which has recently been extended to include an additional interior design specialist.

It's not surprising that Jonathan no longer talks in terms of 'kitchen design', instead he looks at the bigger picture, referring to his work as 'living design'. It's a phrase, which sums up his design ethos and goes some way towards explaining his extraordinary success.
